Ir used to be a notion in the old days of slavery that white men could not work with safety in the climate of our Southern times used as a flimsy argument in support of the system of slave labor. Necessity is sometimes a very good as well as a very hard teacher, and has shown that there is no toundation to this supposition. The New Orleans Picayune says:

The New Orleans Picagune says:

"Those who have not heard the facts which settle this question should know that white laborers are working in the fields all over the State of Louisiana the year round as low down as tide water from the Gult of Mexico, and on the islashs along the gull shore. And these laborers are not more sickly than the geroes, or men who stay in the shade. Entors, doctors, and travelers have often reterred to this fact. The old prejudices with an elegance and cooless that says with an elegance and cooless that the server of the says with an elegance and cooless that the says with the says w referred to this fact. The old prejudices sainst this climate are fast dying out, but they are not all of them dead."

On the same day with the Presidential dection several of the States are to endesver to improve their constitutions. The main fault-is with the convention who submitted such a bundle of crudities to the people, coupled with conditions cunningly and corruptly so contrived, that it was hardly possible it would be renected. Underlying that, is the folly of the people in allowing themselves to be deluded by protestations of so-called Democracy into sanctioning by their votes what has nothing in it of democracy, except the name. A few lessons such as they are now taking, will probably take some of that out of them, and if that is not enough, the prospect of being swamped pefore its adoption.
